

PARENTS' ATTENDANCE AT BUNDY PARTY HIGHLIGHT OF FAMILY WEEKEND

"Sketchy" and "Bro" now in parental vocab

By Ms. Tomkin '12

BADASSMINTON DEPT.

(HAMILTON COLLEE) With Family Weekend over and students now able to attend parties and orgies freely without parental discretion, students recently reflected on the true highlight of the weekend: the family-friendly Heaven and Hell party on Halloween night.

"My father hugged me for the first time after he caught me shotgunning a Keystone," Mike Hunt '11 said. "I've never felt so loved."

"I was in the acapella concert, but my parents missed my performance to go to Bundy," an anonymous member of Duelly Noted admitted. "At first I was upset, but I got over it the next morning when my Dad woke up outside of the Bristol Center missing a shoe and my mom came back from Babbitt with a $100 bill tucked into her underwear."

She added, "There really is no better bonding experience than nursing your parents' hangovers."

Students also now have the upper hand in the child-parent relationship because of embarrassing parental conduct.

"My daughter tagged pictures of me doing a keg stand on her Facebook profile and only took them down when I bought her a new camera," Judy Nudith P'12 said. "Not that I find that ironic at all."

"My mom and dad are finally getting that divorce they've been threatening each other with for ten years after my dad hooked up with a freshman girl!" Amelia Daye '11 said. "True, that girl turned out to be a dude dressed as Sarah Palin, but who cares? Now I get two Christmases!"

The experiences united many families.

Mike Hunt concluded, "What happens in Bundy stays in Bundy...except if my mom got knocked up by an AD bro there. In that case, I'm glad I'm not living there anymore."

EDITORIAL RESPONSE:

MR. LEUBSDORF'S MOTHER

In last week's issue, we published a letter purportedly from Editor-in-Chief Will Leubsdorf's mother. Mr. Leubsdorf's actual mother was quite upset upon learning about the letter. After several threats to stop paying tuition and start researching disinheritance laws, we agreed to provide Mrs. Leubsdorf a forum to respond.

Dear Will,

You misjudge me, sweetie. For one thing, I love your freakishly large head, although I do sometimes wonder how you manage to keep it upright and balanced on your matchstick neck.

The fact is, I would be more likely to attend Family Weekend if you had chosen a college that was possible to find without using an advanced GPS system, or one that had a decent hotel nearby.

When Daddy and I came up for Family Weekend during your freshman year, we nearly ended up sleeping in the rental car parked near a bunch of hobos in Utica. Remember? And there was so much freezing rain and snow through all three days that my shoes didn't completely dry out until you were a sophomore.

If you'd like to see us more regularly in graduate school, here's some advice: Think Guadalajara. The weather is excellent, and what's the big deal about accreditation, anyway?

Love and kisses,
Mrs. Leubsdorf P'10

DORM ENERGY BATTLE TAKES 300 LIVES

Tonight, they dine in Hell, aka Wertimer

By Lesley Ryder '11

NOT EASY BEING GREEN DEPT.

(HAMILTON COLLEGE) With 300 lives lost and one week to go in Hamilton's first energy battle, students are cutting every last kilowatt to defeat their competition in the other dorms.

"It's actually quite convenient. It's finally given me a good excuse to not shower for an extended period of time," Keehn resident Henry Adams '10 remarked. "Anything to help the environment, right?"

Others chose a slightly more practical approach. "My suitemates found a way to make one of those Al Gore light bulbs out of Keystone cans and copies of The Daily Bull," Babbit resident Jenna Gordon '09 said excitedly. "Those Milbank fuckers won't know what hit them."

"We constructed a giant hamster wheel in our common room to generate more energy," Jordan Williams '09 commented. "All we have to do is dangle a can of beer and the freshmen run for hours on end."

Some students used guerilla tactics instead. "We went through the first floor of Major and turned on every light switch, oven, microwave, shower, and fan we could find," Minor resident Lia Klowksi '12 recounted. "Serves them right for going after our thermostats."

Yet, the mischief went beyond stealth maneuvers. "We were too lazy to try to find Wertimer, so my roommate put his Comp Sci major to use and See "Wither Captain Planet?" pg. 3

ADMINISTRATION FINDS NEW PLACE FOR WOMYN'S CENTER: BUFFERS SUITE

Irony appreciated by neither groups

By Mr. Mahmud '11

IF I WERE NOT A WOMYN...DEPT.

(HAMILTON COLLEGE) Due to the impending destruction of the Womyn's Center building, the Administration will relocate the center to the Buffer's Millbank suite, while future plans of destroying the performing arts have been put on hold.

"The whole idea of 'womyn' is ludicrous! Why can't all women ignore their rights and become marginalized sex-slaves?" Mark Palin '09 roared. "What do they need a building for? Isn't the McEwen kitchen enough?"

"Are the Buffers supposed to share their room with women now? Isn't The Green Apple enough free-thinking propaganda?" Buffer-groupie Sally Hill '11 questioned. "This is the biggest tragedy since I got betrayed by my roommate in Humans vs. Zombies."

Some campus members responded positively.

"I'm glad the Womyn's Center is finally getting the recognition they deserve," Joe Briggs '12 proclaimed. "The amount of successful ass I've gotten after girls saw me at I ♥ Female Orgasm has been incredible. Keep up the horny... I mean good work!"

"This could be a good learning experience for both groups," Susie Li '09 said. "Although it will probably lead to bloodbath, which let's be honest, will be hilarious to watch."

Both the Buffers and the Womyn's Center were resigned to the move. See "Tumbling After: Jealous?" pg. 2

BARACK OBAMA WINS PRESIDENCY, EVERYONE'S PROBLEMS SOLVED

Dow surges 25,000 points, Bill O'Reilly shot
By Mr. Zappala '12

IT'S JUST LIKE CHRISTMAS! DEPT.
(HAMILTON COLLEGE) On Tuesday Barack Obama trounced the Republican ticket of John McCain and Tina Fey. By Wednesday morning Sarah Palin was admitted to Bellevue's mental facilities, and Donald Trump's natural hair grew in.

Likewise on the Hill, promising changes were seen surfacing throughout the week.

"Wednesday morning I got up to find only two e-mails in my inbox," Harold Meeks '12 commented excitedly. "One told me my Q-Lit requirement was gone and the other said my tuition was being refunded. It was the best day of my life."

"This morning The Bull was funny, my Macro Econ lecture was cancelled, and I could have sworn I heard on the news that Colgate crumbled to the ground," Travis Belcher '10 added. "Best of all: I'm going to celebrate by having breakfast at McEwen on a Saturday morning."

Even grim situations showed rays of hope.

"When I heard the Womyn's Center was closing down," Jessica Marrony '11 said. "It was like when my sister lost my copy of John Tucker Must Die. But now that alumni are paying for all of us to study abroad in Maui while they build a new Womyn's Center, I'm stoked."

President Joan Hinde Stewart exclaimed, "I got a call from U.S. News and World Report this morning telling us our ranking rose 9 spots. Needless to say, I took Joe and Nancy to Carnegie and got schwasted."

Even College Republicans were rewarded.

"This is great!" Ron Keating '09 celebrated. "The liberals in my hall stopped beating me, so I don't need to be a Republican to be a nonconformist. Obama 2012!"

"We hope to gain from this experience," Buffers spokesman Matt Lindsey '10 said. "By living with such strong, positive role models, perhaps we can grow as individuals and stop incorporating sexist stereotypes into our shows.... sike!"

"While we're sad to lose our old home, we realize Hamilton's excess of money needs to be spent destroying useful stuff," Womyn's Center rep Alyssa Stein '11 acknowledged. "After all, if we don't have clear sightlines on the quad, how can we possibly move forward as a college?"

HAMILTON STRUCK WITH WAVE OF MURDERS

Students increasingly protective of lives,
North Face jackets

By Mr. Haluza '11

GPS HEAVEN DEPT.

(HAMILTON COLLEGE) In what appears to be the biggest safety scandal since Captain Tripp's "Three Joints for a BJ" offer, a series of grisly murders has nearly crippled the Hamilton College community.

"These killings seem to occur mostly between Thursday and Saturday night, when the campus is generally more accepting of unusual behavior, such as streaking, property damage, and sacrificing sub-free kids to the Martin's Way cat," Campus Safety officer Owen Dallas explained.

Campus Safety has so far recorded four murders at gunpoint, six vehicular homicides, and twenty-five deaths resulting from bro rape. Students are being asked to take necessary precautions on the weekends.

"An all-campus email suggested buying pepper spray to take with me on my drunken cross-campus treks," Amanda Devine '10 commented. "But it said Sidewinder missiles were preferable."

Jake Greenman '11 reported an unusual recent sighting. "I was running to the Why So Serious? party last weekend when I saw townies dragging away a few kids, probably freshmen. I thought it was just some over-zealous Heath Ledger impersonators when the stabbing began."

However, most students expressed apathy.

"This 'crisis' is really just the same townie crap we have to deal with every year," Tom Patton '09 stated. "Some upper-class kids get their high tech gear stolen or are found mutilated with their body parts strewn across Minor Field, and everyone just freaks out."

Keith Chillner '11 shared similar sentiments.

"Hey, when all you have for entertainment is reading The Young Socialist, you're pretty much begging for someone to thin out the population."

Despite the drastic measures, HEAG was pleased to see a renewed competitive spirit sweep the campus.

"Admittedly, some factors are outside our control," HEAG spokesman Justin Nitterman '11 remarked. "But the Kirkland residents have kindly agreed to release the McIntosh hostage."
