THE UNITED STATES

Scranton, Pennsylvania

John McCain and Sarah Palin escalated their attacks on Barack Obama, calling him a socialist, a huge lame-o, and “a jerk face.” The attacks have not been effective, as audiences have been distracted by the stench of desperation around the GOP ticket.

Wasilla, Alaska

Politico reported that the Republican National Committee has spent over $150,000 on clothes for Sarah Palin, including $75,000 at Nieman Marcus. The McCain campaign defended the purchases as a critical part of their strategy to keep male voters focused on Palin’s jugs instead of her brain.

Boston, Massachusetts

John Kerry made a joke about McCain using Depends adult diapers, hurting McCain’s feelings as Kerry promised he was going to keep that a secret.

THE WORLD

Iran

The government arrested two pigeons flying near a nuclear power plant this week, accusing them of spying on Iran’s nuclear program. The pigeons responded to the allegations by dropping birdshit on everything.

Great Britain

Is Amy Winehouse dead yet? If she’s still alive, that’s a clear sign that she made a hardcore pact with Satan.

SPORTS

Tampa Bay, Florida

The Tampa Bay Rays won a berth in the World Series, defeating the Red Sox as the three horsemen of the Apocalypse rode across the sky, lava spewed from the ground, and the final battle between the Anti-Christ and Jesus began.

Dallas, Texas

Dallas Cowboys cornerback Adam “Pacman” Jones was suspended indefinitely for alcohol violations, in the least shocking development since Hitler invaded Poland.

When I came to Hamilton, I thought college ladies would dig a 17-year-old with no facial hair. Boy was I wrong. Things are getting desperate for my little Mikey, and I'm not the only one. Just this morning, I woke up wearing a woman's wig, and my roommate was spooning me. For the rest of you freshmen boys who aren't into dress-up butt rape, I bet your porksword is more abused than a prisoner at Guantanamo Bay. Here's some advice on how to properly utilize your sperm-cannon.

Handle the Aftermath

Clean-up is the most important part of play. You have several options to ensure your seamen don't go overboard all over your History of Iceland textbook. Tissue paper is easily available, but environmentally unfriendly. Socks are cheap, but after one use they become crustier than John McCain. My advice: buy a toy water snake. It doesn't become icky with proper cleaning, and makes priming your sex machine more gratifying.

Avoid Overuse

After three hand surgeries during middle school for auto-erotic-related carpal tunnel, I'm wiser about self-producing too much man juice. Never spank the monkey more than five times in a row or ten times a day. Your best option is to become ambidextrous, or find another dude to help out time-to-time, like my high school track coach.

Satiate Your Emotional Needs

While good ole righty may be fulfilling your carnal needs, it's no substitute for a real-life woman nagging the crap out of you. Giving your hand a feminine name is always a good start, like Handgelina Jolie, Handalie Portman, or Handrique Iglesias. Role-playing is another good tool. However, if you break up with your “girlfriend” then your life will be constantly awkward.

BRO CENTER HOSTS EVENT ON MALE ORGASM

Discusses cultural norms, better boning

By Ms. Mintzer '09

BROS BEFORE HOS DEPT.

(HAMILTON COLLEGE) Bras all over Hamilton participated in the “I <3 Male Orgasm” event on Tuesday, sponsored by the Bro Center to provide a safe and healthy environment to an overcapacity crowd of bros, and the ladies who want to make them happy, eager to learn about the male orgasm in a “fun and playful manner.”

“This is totally dank, man,” Josh Baker '11 said. “I’m so glad I chose a school where I’m encouraged to learn to jack-off better. Suck on that, Middlebury!”

“I feel so empowered, like I’ve suddenly figured out how my body works,” Rob Green '12 said. “Now I feel like a real myn for the first time like, ever.”

Topics covered in the seminar included: Finding the Elusive P-Spot: Does the Penis Exist?, Getting off Without Listening to Dave Matthews or O.A.R.: Is It Possible?, and most importantly, Getting a handjob in Class Without the Professor Noticing.

“I’m so excited that my guy and I had a chance to learn about what he likes in bed,” Courtney Feldman '12 said. “It’s so hard to figure out ways to make men happy, besides cornholing them with a strap-on while wearing a Hermione Granger costume.”

The Bro Center hopes that the event made bros feel more comfortable and familiar with their bodies so they can finally have the orgasms they deserve and keep Brorgies healthy and safe. See “Mr. Anne Sprinkle,” pg. 3

ISC APPROVES 28 NEW GREEK SOCIETIES

D-Phi moves up social ladder, by default

By Ms. Stagner '09

MODERATION DEPT.

(HAMILTON COLLEGE) The Intersociety Council approved 28 new societies last week, more than tripling the number of Greek organizations on campus. The new organizations, pending approval from the Administration, include Sigma Upsilon Kappa, Mu Mu, Omicron Omega, Epsilon Computers, Delta Delta, and 17 other frats with the letter Delta in it.

Susan Phillips '10 explained, “Mu Mu is a sorority that will help the women on campus in a compassionate and caring environment over Opus cookies, ice cream, and any other food that helps us temporarily overcome our feelings of inadequacy and need for belonging.”

“This vote gives more people on campus a chance to belong to an organization that will, like, totally ignore the unfetch people not in it,” SUK member Sarah Whittaker '09 commented. “I’m looking forward to the opportunity to exclude my inferiors.”

Some existing societies were not pleased.

“Do you realize how hard it is going to be to score with the ladies when all the guys belong to fraternities that all sound alike?” Mike Lockhart '10 observed. “They are going to have no idea how cool I am when I say I am a brother of DU.”

Lockhart paused. “Sorry, I meant Psi U.”

UPPERCLASSMEN AND FRESHMEN DORM TENSIONS REACH ALL-TIME HIGH

ResLife sighs, takes swig from flask

By Mr. Zappala '12

FUTURE CO-OP RESIDENT DEPT.

(HAMILTON COLLEGE) Problems between upperclassmen and freshmen living in the same halls have escalated past dirty, embittered glares into full-scale warfare, involving Science Center alligators being allocated into doubles and senior singles burned to the ground.

"We just couldn't take it anymore," John Wells '10 yelled. "We moved into singles because we're antisocial. We don't want to talk to anyone, and this goes double for pesky little freshmen baking cakes in the common room and blasting Disturbia so loudly that I can hear through my constantly closed door."

Freshmen took offense to such comments.

"All these upperclassmen think they know everything," Halley Dane '12 said. "Well, I have a message for them: I took 5 AP's during senior year of high school, so you watch out when I kick your asses across all of your 200 level classes."

Dane is currently failing all her classes, including PE Badminton.

Battlegrounds have included common rooms and dorm parties.

"We want to watch Monday Night Football and all the freshmen girls on the floor want to watch Gossip Girl and One Tree Hill. It's just wrong," Nick O'Grady '11 whined. "I don't care if Dan and Serena get back together after their fight in the elevator."

When asked why he knew these details about the show, O'Grady had no comment.

"I come back to Milbank an hour after we started getting schwasted and our Keystones were gone." Nina Delay '09 commented the next morning after she regained speech capacity. "Someone needs to teach these frosh that beruit is the only acceptable reason to drink fifteen beers in thirty minutes."

However, recent events have united all students.

"As it turns out," Harry Knowles '11 explained. "It doesn't matter what class year you are when you are huddling for warmth outside of Root at 3:30 AM thanks to a rouge fire alarm."

FIRST ISSUE OF DEXTER COMES OUT

Has The Green Apple taught us anything?

By Mr. Mahmud '11

BETTER THAN THE RIGHT DEPT.

(HAMILTON COLLEGE) The new independent paper Dexter debuted this week to mixed reviews from the student body. Dexter's lack of contributors, illustrators, editors, girls, boys, cows, dogs, gin, lazy sex puns, boobies, and dead baby jokes hampered readership of the first issue.

"Another paper? Isn't my ignoring of The Spectator's attempt to educate me about ladies' undergarments and the two 'horniest people of the week' sending a strong enough message?" liberal Mary Fazio '10 cried. "It's bad enough that we let conservatives study here—now we have to pretend to care what they have to say?"

"Where are they getting the money for Dexter?" Hillary Balding '09 questioned. "More importantly, who wants to read conservatives whining about Palin and McCain losing to the whitest-black guy west of Michael Jackson?"

Some students responded positively.

"Thank god the other side of Hamilton student life is now being told. All we get right now is written masturbatory odes to Obama and The Duel printing the same goddamn cheetah joke for 11 straight issues!" Paul Bieber '12 said. "Now we can have more educated discussion and public discourse. Besides, the font is really really big so I can read it."

Alumni were also pleased.

"Thank god Hamilton finally has a publication fighting the decline of our college's standards," Davis Love III '77 squealed. "Before Dexter, Hamilton publications were going downhill, with the Womyn's Center funding a new publication! Seriously, who gave the Womyn's Center money, or for that matter the right to talk?!"

He added, "If this freedom given to our students doesn't stop, we're going to have to start caging them and shipping them to fight wars in third world countries again and teach students to act like John Wayne Indian-massacring wife-abusing manly men, especially the women."

However, some were skeptical.

"I don't think I need to become 'more familiar with my body,'" Dave Stolfer '10 snorted. "I just familiarized myself with my body for ten minutes in bed while my roommate was watching SportsCenter."

"The session was kind of cool, I guess," Michael Stark '09 admitted. "But there was some false advertising for that event. I thought they'd have free porn and some easy girls there—not a lecture. What a disappointment."

comment. KDO and Sig refused to respond to any inquiries, as that they were busy guarding the secret of Mary Madelegne ala The Da Vinci Code, and no one has heard from Stryker in two years besides local coke dealers.

Students remained wary of the new societies.

"Omicron Omega? Seriously?" Devon Casesse '12 asked. "That isn't a name for a frat. That's a name for a planet in Star Trek, or at the very least a porno about a planet from Star Trek."

"Our social scene is fine the way it is. Isn't Scottish Country Dancing enough for people?" Lou Baranowski '09 questioned. "What more could students possibly want?"
