PLEDGES RUSH TO THE FOOD TRUCKS

Like hyenas but on two legs

By Mr. Projansky ’21

WASP DEPT.

(MARTIN’S WAY) As the food truck craze takes over campus, fraternities and sororities have been attempting to capitalize on the free grub by incorporating the trucks into rush events.

“One of our key rush events this year is a race to see who can get to the trucks the fastest,” DIK prefect Lee Mc’Queen ’22 told us while munching down on gyros. “Is it Abelist? Uh, yeah, a bit. Is it harder for students who may have to work jobs on campus to support themselves and thus can’t run to get food at the drop of a hat? Yeah sure, but I think both of these things are in the fraternal spirit.”

“I kinda think about it like natural selection,” sorority star Heather Heathers ’21 said while trying to determine how pretty the rushes were.

CHAPLAINCY USES FOOD TRUCKS TO INCREASE SERVICE ATTENDANCE

Offering five flavors of Communion wine

By Mr. Chivily ’23

SHAMELESS EVANGELIZATION DEPT.

(THE CHAPEL) After low attendance at religious observances, the chaplaincy came up with a plan to increase participation: food trucks during religious observances. “We’re disappointed that no one is coming to worship God or Yahweh or Krishna or Judi Dench or whatever you’re into. So, we are collaborating with CAB to bring religious-themed food trucks to increase the attendance at services. We’ll have something for everyone: Halal trucks, vegetarian trucks for Hindus and Buddhists, and trucks serving pasta for the Pastafarians,” Chaplain Mark Green said.

The new initiative has already been very successful. People have waited in line for hours for food, all the while attending religious services. “I think my favorite food truck is Catholic Cookery, although it was just an unmarked white van. Their chocolate-covered hosts are sinfully delicious, and you’re filled with a sense of guilt after eating them

“Greek life is under attack right now, and there is a big question about whether we’re going to have members who fight for their right to make questionable choices with their friends, or whether we’re gonna be stomped out. If I don’t see a rush drawing some blood while fighting for a spot in line, I don’t want ’em!”

“Look, it is clear that if our administration didn’t rely on alumni who were in Greek life to donate to us for funding, these organizations would be killed without a moment of hesitation,” David Wippman said at the opening of Food Truck Fridays. “However, the level of athleticism is so great that for all rushes I have decided to waive one of your mandatory gym requirements. If for some reason you can’t rush or don’t want to because you think ‘Greek life perpetuates harmful gender norms,’ sorry not sorry, loser.”

“You know, I don’t think I would say I expected rush to be like this,” Ned Fred ’24 said, “but I also didn’t not expect it to be like this, you know?”

because they’re so rich. Talk about Body-Ody-Ody of Christ,” Jessica Higgins ’22 said.

Not every food truck has seen success. “You know, there’s something like fifty different Protestant food trucks, and every time a truck’s staff has an argument three new trucks appear. And then there are these so-called ‘non-denominational’ food trucks which try to simultaneously serve a dozen different cuisines at once. Everyone’s kinda overwhelmed and avoiding them. And no one seems to be purchasing anything from the Bundy food truck serving Kool-Aid,” CAB President Kyle James ’21 said.

“We’re quite pleased by the success of this food truck initiative. So, the administration plans on extending it to every facet of Hamilton College life. For example, in lieu of peer counseling, we’ll have trucks giving out alcohol and Xanax. Listen, you kids will wait two hours for cold Indian food, so I’ll bet that you’ll wait for anything served out of the back of a truck,” President Wippman said. In the spirit of these new initiatives, the administration plans to distribute financial aid vouchers out of a food truck to the first one hundred students who show up, forcing the rest of the student body to pay full tuition.

STUDENTS BAFFLED BY “FOOD TRUCK”

Just a pickup and some loose nuts

By Mr. Wilson ’23

BIG WHITE VAN DEPT.

(MCEWWWW CAFÉ) The recent announcement of Food Truck Fridays caused a stir on Hamilton’s campus, due to the lack of exciting food options ever since the now-infamous “Goddamnit Connor I Told You to Stop Dangling All Our Spices Over the Balcony like Michael Jackson’s Baby” incident, leaving them with nothing but salt and K-2. Students were unenthusiastic, however, to find out exactly what kind of food truck Hamilton had in mind.

Friday, in lieu of the normal Minar or taco truck, Agnes Kyliznikov and her rusty Toyota pulled into the circle outside the Margaret Bundy Scott Field House. Kyliznikov had a unique method of distribution. Once set up, instead of the normal system of tickets and a line, she had students get into small groups of four or nine (only those two quantities) and come up with a team name. She then proceeded to completely ignore those teams and toss out handfuls of cashews. On her process, she remarked, “I give them fun thing to do, they enjoy cashews more than if no teams because cashews not a fun nut.”

Students were taken aback. Damon Fields ’21 said, “I mean I’ll take it. It’s more protein than I’ve gotten all semester, but she keeps yelling at me to save the dolphins and it makes me wonder how much she’s gotten out of the house since the 90’s.” Fields went back for more nuts, but Kyliznikov had already moved on to showering the students in Orange Fanta and pelting them with cooked brown rice.

The college reported no knowledge of Kyliznikov’s practices, citing her “very professional” website and “very professional” dark web blackmailing techniques. In typical Hamilton fashion, they have since promised to form a committee to oversee the process of selecting a board to figure out questions to ask about what happened.

The characteristically terse Kyliznikov had this to say about her service: “They asked for food truck. I have truck. I have food. What is want more?” Then she drove off into the sunset, leaving a trail of waffle batter and arrest warrants behind her.

Friday Five:
Best New Course Offerings

By Ms Terhune '21

Did Intro to Painting fill before you could register? Are you being forced to learn about things called "social structures," "hierarchies," and "morals" despite being a Gov major? Well, damn! That sucks. But good news, bud: the registrar just announced 101 new class offerings for Fall 2021. Here are the hottest new courses:

5. WMGST103– First Course. Filled with tingles of flavor, the First Course will delight your tongue more than a shot of Jameson followed by a shot of pickle juice (a pickleback). In the First Course, students will sample the gastronomical stylings of Chef Jean-Jacques Rousseau, famed French culinary artist. To start each Monday/ Wednesday evening off, students will eat lighter foods such as caprese salads, leek and ginger matzo balls in lemongrass consommé, and calamari with a side of creamy brine (like the brine used in picklebacks). This course, taught by Professor of Women's and Gender Studies Leigh Dee, will also teach students about the social dynamics involved in eating dinner. To always command respect at dinner, students should expect to learn how to properly use cutlery, cross their ankles, and stop gabbing all the damn time, Jean-Jacques.

4. MATH360– Second Course. The Second Course (or Secondo Piatto if you're Italian) aims to show students how to flesh out their meats. In the Second Course, students will learn to cook and swallow hunks of meat such as lamb, chicken, and steak (these meats do not include picklebacks). As part of the course, students will learn how to count meats (one, two, three) in addition to learning how to eat them. As such, this course will count toward the QSR requirement and also the Meat Requirement, which hasn't been instituted yet but will be formally announced next year.

3. LIT219– Third Course. In Third Course, students should expect to use their hands. Professor of Literature Bib Lio carefully curated this syllabus to provide students an opportunity to try desserts (some of which pair well with picklebacks) while paying an exorbitant amount of money to a soulless institution. However, Bib Lio felt an enormous amount of hubris and gastrointestinal issues and shredded that syllabus. Instead of eating desserts, students enrolled in the Third Course will tear pages out of books to wrap their meats in. Why? More meats, more teats. Students will also be encouraged to use torn pages to blow their nose, make paper airplanes, and wipe up loose pickleback, though the emphasis really is on the whole wrapping the meats thing.

2. GEOSC140 – Fourth Course. In the Fourth Course, students will mentally prepare themselves for the Fifth Course. The Fifth Course is a site of perfection, and students who attempt to register for the Fifth Course without properly readying themselves will be immediately blasted into the sky (like me after I've had too many picklebacks). This class is listed as a Geosciences course so that you can feel like you've learned about rocks without having to actually smell them.

1. GOD1000– Fifth Course. Fuck, man.

is that skateboarder forty?

That's not Kurt Cobain, right? No, he'd never ride a longboard.
Dad? Is that my dad?
Hey, isn't that your freshman year roommate Ghislaine Maxwell? Oh, wait. She lived in North, never mind
Is that the skateboarder featured in the next season of Too Hot to Handle?
Did he direct "Two Girls, One Cup" or was that Martin Scorsese?
Is he hitting a Juul or does he just have black lung?
Why is he low-key hot?
He looks like the guy my mom left my dad for. Steve?! Is that you?
He's not responding so I don't think it's Steve.
Is he wearing my shirt? Where did that shirt go?
Do you think he has all six toes?
Is that a limited-edition RipStik?
Is he naturally blon– he's definitely not naturally blond.
No, What do you think his tongue tastes like?
Do you think it tastes like good?
Is he uncircumcised or normal?
Does he teach my women and gender studies class?
Do you think you can replace my tire?
What's his net worth?
What's his net, net, net worth?
Do you think my mom would like him?
What's his stance on Syria?
Do you think he could catch me up on Game of Thrones?
I missed a couple episodes.
No way is that mole on his chest not melanoma!
Do you think he can see us pointing and laughing at him?
Is that RJ Steele, the hottest eligible Canadian bachelor on campus? I heard he sympathy menstruates as a sign of respect.
Do you think that if he drove a car he would stand on top of that, too?
I haven't seen him all winter. Has he been hibernating like a squirrel or a fuzzy wuzzy wittle beawr?
Do you think you would let me brush him from top to tail?
Do you think he would let me breast-feed him? I hear he can lactate oat milk (he's a Music minor).
Do you think he's going anywhere or just cruising?
Do you think he'd drive me to the airport if I sat in the backseat?
Wonder if his God complex ever interferes with his boarding... probably
When do you think he could read over this paper I wrote?
